Regarding the special mentions, the jury explained that Blok – Cuina de barri “promotes healthy, sustainable, and accessible food, as well as community activities in the Mariola neighbourhood of Lleida,” while Clínic Lleida offers “comprehensive healthcare services based on technological innovation and personalised patient care.”

As for the first prize, the award went to the project CaLagneta – Art i Vi, led by Montserrat Rocaginé Comelles, a graduate in Audiovisual Communication from the University of Lleida (UdL). The initiative, which combines contemporary art, wine, and local gastronomy, was recognised at the award ceremony held on Thursday evening at the Rectorate building.
